The Anchorage City Council is scheduled to say farewell to its buses, bus stops and other mass transit fixtures today.

Transferring the city's transportation assets to the borough is up for a vote during the council meeting that begins at 4 p.m.

City traffic engineers have estimated the value of the city's transit system at $61,151. And additional unexpended $10,000 is contained in transit accounts.

Councilmen will be asked to vote on whether to turn the assets over to the Anchorage Borough at the equip-ment's appraised value. The borough assumes area-wide mass transit authority July 1. Two weeks ago, the council turned over to the borough the city's transportation program for the elderly.

THE CITY MASS transit program was funded primarily by grants from the federal Department of Transportation. Thus, traffic engineers calculate in a report to the City Council that the city should be credited with paying for only about $18,300 of the $61,151 worth of transportation equipment and facilities.

If approved by the council, the borough will receive six buses at an appraised value of $40,000, 218 bus stop signs, destination signs, shuttle bus signs and bus tokens.

The council also will be asked to approve the 1974 real and personal property tax levy for city residents. The city had not released for publication over the weekend the proposed levy.

THE LAST MATTER of business on the council's agenda is the appointment of Douglas Weiford as city manager. That act by the council, however, will merely be a formality as Weiford is due to take over as the city's chief administrator today. His appointment already has been approved informally by the council, and he is scheduled to be introduced during a press conference at 10 a.m. today.
